Santa Claus Money Goes Farthest Here.

The last eight days before Christmas will find "The Dependable Store's" Holiday Stocks at the floodtide of completeness—and in royal readiness for the final rush of buying. All is activity in receiving rooms and stock rooms—ticketing and forwarding to their respective departments the vast quantities of Christmas merchandise that are coming pouring in. At every counter is plain evidence of our preparedness. Every stock that bears relation to the Yuletide season is provided in most plentiful variety—most satisfying assortment—at lowest price combined with intrinsic worth.

Already you have helped us to more than double last year's Christmas business—and this forcibly bespeaks the public's verdict of approval. We enter upon the last days with values of unmatchable merit—with offerings that plainly evidence our determination to excel the record of the past. What shall the gift be?

"I just want to be left alone like poor little 'Zola' in 'Break Home'." Is the way she expressed herself to a Times reporter last night. "The public have tried to own me, body and soul, for half a year, and it is nearly time that satisfy myself their curiosity. I don't mind telling you, though, some of the things you say people are curious to know about me."

"Yes, I mentioned one of Dickens' characters. But as a rule I am not fond of them. The suffering and misery of his people pain me."

"You know he speaks in his preface to 'Dombey and Son' of wandering the streets of Paris all the night on which he made Paul die. 'Twas nearly so with me, when I read of little Paul drifting out to the eternal sea, which blows around the world, and sometimes blows me overboard. I have been there, Mrs.
Bonnie closed her eyes for a moment as if to shut out some retrospect she would have none of. It was easy to guess where her thoughts had dared to lead her."

Mrs. Bonnie a Free Woman.

The rain pattered into the face of a smiling woman last night as she spoke these words. The grief and joy of her hair and scattered the stray locks. She stood on the doorstep of her home and inhaled long, grateful breaths of fresh air.
It was her first night of rest freedom after six months of imprisonment, and she acted as might a bird which has escaped from a cage into the open.

She was Mrs. Bonnie, the same frail woman who had sat for weeks through one of the most sensational trials in the annals of the District—the same, and yet a very different woman. As she smiled at the threshold of her home she seemed a remote personage from the one who had been accused of a wonderful murder.

In Her Home Life.

From the warmly lighted parlor came the sounds of children at play and of girlish laughter. The clutter of dishes and the fragrant steam of cooking food which came from the rear surrounded this woman with a halo of motherhood and of matronhood. She was petite and dainty, but withal was first womanly.

Inside the little home at 1111 N Street northwest all was pleasure and happiness last night. Husband, wife, children, brother and sisters formed a cheerful group, and the pain and misery of the old days were forgotten. But for the remembrance that within a brief twenty-four hours the mother had stood indicted for murder, the past might easily have been classed as a nightmare.

Public Sentiment Curious.

Curiously regarding Mrs. Bonnie has not abated, although the curtain has fallen on her as a public character. Many people would still make her life the theatre of their speculation, as to how she will live in the future, her tastes, what books she is fond of, and all the other petty details the mimes of a lesser playhouse are so fond of exploiting before the world.
